R) Read the passage and answer the questions.(2.25)

When we communicate with others, we express our thoughts and feelings through the words and also tone of voice and body language. In fact, many communications specialists believe that we send more information non-verbally (without words) than verbally (with words). "Body Language" is an important part of non-verbal communication.

Body Language has many different parts of our everyday physical behavior: the way we say hello to someone, how we stand, how we sit or walk, the way we position our arms and legs or use our hands and eyes.

To learn another language is more than just learning words and grammar, it needs learning about another culture, too. Body Language is different from culture to culture. Sometimes, cultural differences cause problems. For example, there are cultural differences in how much distance should be kept between two people who are speaking together. Some people stand closer to you but some other from different cultures keep distance. Another common example is the use of smile. Smiling back at a teacher who is unhappy is not a good idea in most English speaking cultures. Also you should know that moving your head up and down does not mean "yes" in all cultures.

Even speakers of the same language, such as British, American or Australian people, may not use the same body language and should know the differences to communicate successfully. For example, British people are formal in general and they show it in their body language but Americans are more open while Australians are relaxed. Understanding cultural differences can help you understand and use body language to make your communications better.

You should not allow a fear of making language mistakes stop you from speaking. Most people will understand that people from different cultures may not always use body language in the same way. However, it is good to learn as much as possible about body language of a new culture and not to have mistakes because she is worried. Maybe she smiles because she remembers something. Maybe she smiles because she is about to do something silly. Some people think she is not smiling at all. Her smile is mystery. That is why the painting is so famous.

You can see the painting in a book or on the Internet. But the original painting is in Paris. It is in the museum called the Louvre. The Louvre is one the largest museum in the world. It is also one of the most famous. It used to be the palace of the King of France. But now it belongs to the people of France. It has more than thirty thousand artworks in it. more than 8 million people visit it every year. Most of them go to see the Mona Lisa.

Mona Lisa is kept behind thick glass. you will see that it has a guard. This is because in 1911 the painting was stolen. Nobody knew where it was for two years. But finally the thief was caught. And luckily the painting was found.
