13	Reading Read the following passage and answer the questions. Socrates (c.470-399 BC) was one of the greatest Greek philosophers. Little is known about Socrates' early life except that he served several times as a soldier and showed great bravery. He was born in Athens when that city was the leader of the world in literature, art, and government. Socrates knew all the most famous writers and statesmen of his time, but he had no desire to be famous himself. He only wanted to show people how to live wisely and happily, and to convince them that wisdom and honesty are more important than riches or fame. His guiding rule was "know yourself". The young men of Athens were eager to learn from him. Socrates did not write down his teachings or invent any system of philosophy. Instead he talked with the young men wherever he met them, and started them thinking for themselves about what is good in life. Some of these young men later became writers and wrote down Socrates' ideas. The most	4

important of his followers was Plato. Plato's writings are Dialogues in which the main speaker is Socrates, discussing some question with his young friends. Socrates would ask one of them to give an opinion on a subject. Socrates would then ask him questions. Often the person questioned had not really thought very deeply and had no good reason for his opinion. Then by more questioning they all tried to find the true answer. This method of learning the truth by asking questions has been named "Socratic" or "dialectic".

14 Read the following passage and answer the questions.

Let's face the facts about grades. Grades perform three basic functions. First, grades encourage students to work at their highest level of ability. Second, they act as a reward for hard-working students compared to the students who do not work hard. Finally, grades are used as an effective standard by which we can measure the student's achievement. Good grades help students to get jobs and to get into university. I've spoken with a number of students who have jobs, and most of them say that they were hired primarily on the basis of their grades. My grades helped me get a part-time job and will help me get into university next year. I think grades are extremely important at Village High School.
