Have you ever thought about what happens to injured mice, geese, deer, or other wildlife when they are sick or injured? If they are lucky, they might be found by someone who knows about wildlife help centers which are places that care for sick or injured wild animals. They care for the animals until they can be released back into the wild. Sometimes, they take care of farm animals, too. This might include oxen or sheep. Even species of fishes, like trout and salmon can be cared for and nursed back to health. Wildlife help centers are wonderful places greatly needed by communities, especially as our cities enlarge farther into the wild. You can visit these centers and learn more about them. You might even want to volunteer!

26-What is the main idea of the passage?
