An advertisement is a message that is carried in one of the various forms of “media” such as newspapers and magazines, radio and television, and the posters that we see in the street. The purpose of advertisements is usually to make a particular group of people buy the products or service that is offered by the advertiser.

Advertisements can take different shapes and have different purposes. Some are simply informative. The “small ads” columns in local newspapers, for example, may contain notices of items for sale. They show a simple description of the item, but do not normally try to use any special techniques to influence the audience. Other advertisements may try to promote a cause or an idea. You have probably seen posters carrying messages such as “Stop Cutting Trees”.

Sometimes the advertiser is the customer rather than the seller: in the “Job Vacancy” columns of national and local newspapers, companies express their need for people with certain skills to work in certain positions. However, most advertising is concerned with persuading people to buy.
